A good prompt has five parts. Learn the five parts once and you can ask AI anything — and actually get a useful answer back.

THE TASK

Say exactly what you want.

Start with a clear action. Identify, explain, write, find, walk me through. Not a Google search — a request to a person.

THE CONTEXT

Give it the backstory.

What does it need to know to actually help you? Details you'd tell a knowledgeable friend before asking for advice.

THE AUDIENCE

Tell it who's asking.

Are you a beginner or do you know the basics? Is this for you or someone else? Context shapes the answer.

THE TONE

Tell it how to talk to you.

Plain English. Step by step. Simple explanation. No jargon. Say what you need — it adjusts.

THE CONSTRAINTS

Say what you don't want.

Too long? Say shorter. Too technical? Say simpler. Don't like the answer? Say "try again." It won't get offended.

HERE'S WHAT ALL FIVE RULES LOOK LIKE IN REAL LIFE — COPY EITHER ONE AND SWAP THE WORDS IN RED

WHEN YOU NEED TO IDENTIFY SOMETHING

"I found something I don't recognize. It's [describe it — shape, color, size, any markings]. I found it [where]."

WHEN YOU NEED TO FIGURE SOMETHING OUT

"I need to [task you've never done] and I don't know where to start. Walk me through it"

I'm not an expert so explain it simply. What is this, what is it used for, and is it safe to handle?"

step by step. Tell me what I'll need, the order to do it in, and the mistakes people commonly make. Explain it like I've never done this before."

Only swap the words in red. Everything else is already doing the work. The more honest you are about what you're looking at or trying to do, the better the answer.
